Alexandre Day

Physics, machine learning & high-performance computing

Experience

09/14 - Now Physics Ph.D. candidate, P. Mehta's lab Boston University

- Successfully applied reinforcement learning (RL) methods to controlling quantum states (corresponding paper has 20+ citations).
- Contributed to a machine learning review for physicists (~ 120 pages).
- Using RL to accelerate Markov Chain Monte Carlo methods.
- Demonstrated the strengths of using dimensional reduction methods to study glass transitions.

01/16 - Now Collaboration, G. Altan-Bonnet's lab National Institute of Health

- Developed HAL (Hierarchical Agglomerative Learning), an end-to-end pipeline to perform interpretable and robust clustering of high-dimensional single-cell data.
- Application of HAL for Flow cytometry and CyTOF ($\sim 10^6$ data points/sample) data and for immunology and clinical research at NIH.
- Achieved state-of-the-art clustering on the MNIST dataset (score $> 85\%$)

01/13 - 08/13 M.Sc. in Physics, M. Gingras's lab University of Waterloo
Analytical modelling of quantum models representing complicated magnets.

Education

09/14 - 12/18 Ph.D. in Physics Boston University
Application of ML to statistical physics and biophysics problems

01/13 - 08/14 M.Sc. in Physics University of Waterloo, Canada
Modelling and numerically simulating complex quantum magnets

09/09 - 12/12 B.Sc. in Physics University of Sherbrooke, Canada
Internships: numerical simulation of superconductors and quantum magnets
